

Dear Constructor.io recruitment team,

Within my activity on job market my attention was drawn to open Product Manager position in your company. This opportunity looks very interesting for me since I am open for new positions in the field of product management.

Let me introduce myself. I am highly skilled Product manager with 5+ experience of managing eCom products in big companies with complex tech architecture and business structure. In my career I launched new products without a team several times and after proving its value to business-partners, I hired developers and grew the product. I am convinced that it is due to my skills of product discovery (defining product strategy, product-market-fit research, conducting user interviews, planning unit-economics etc.) and soft skills (I like to discuss things and present solutions).

On the other hand, my analytical background (I worked 5 years as product, business- and system-analyst) allows me to understand and even participate in any stage of product delivery, including big data analysis and even low-level coding.

Having strong theoretical basis, I can use modern methodologies to execute result quickly and secure high time to market. This is also because I do not like to hold up the most important stage of product management – releasing your ideas to production and testing related hypotheses.

Despite my experience mostly connected with B2C products, I also created some solutions for business-customers (both internal corporate instruments and B2B-products for external stakeholders).

I also highly appreciate right way of people management and within my career I led more than ten teams of professionals and tried a lot of different approaches. And yet I am a fan of Agile methodologies and Scrum and LESS, particularly.

I am currently searching for a job outside Russia (I relocated to Georgia about year ago) to start my international career, and if it is not an issue for Constructor, I have a good feeling about my profile fitting your requirements.

Assuming the above I am sure that my qualifications make me suitable candidate for the job. You can find my latest CV attached to the online application form. I would love to further explain my motivation and tell you details of my experience in phone or video call. You can reach me either by phone via +995 591 030758 or by email via akhmed.kadymov@gmail.com

Sincerely,

Akhmed Kadymov